BLASFORMEN & EXTRUSIONSWERKZEUGE – short characteristics

The extrusion of plastic masses in the broadest sense has been known as a working method for more than 200 years. As early as 1797, a manually operated press was used in England for the production of seamless lead pipes. Some years later, non-ferrous metals, pasty foods, building materials, ceramics and soap were also processed on similar presses. In Germany, about the middle of the 19th century can be described as the beginning of the production of plastic masses by means of screw press – especially for hoses and rubber compounds. Over the years, extrusion technology has evolved into a versatile, multi-variant manufacturing process in all industrialized countries. The product range extends from extruded products of all kinds to tubes, plates, filaments, foodstuffs and containers in multiple designs. Decisive for the continuous production of such products is, in addition to the extrusion plant, the extrusion tool and, for the particularly important peripheral process, blow molding technology, the blow mold required for this purpose.

The magazine BLASFORMEN & EXTRUSIONSWERKZEUGE informs manufacturers of tools as well as operators of extrusion and blow molding equipment about new developments, design examples, patents and trends.

The print run is 2,000 copies and is IVW-approved.
